(3674) V. E. H. asks: How are spiral brass springs made to hold their temper? A. Spiral brass springs cannot be recuperated. Get new ones when the old weaken.

(3675) F. P. C. asks for the formula for the so-called eggs of Pharaoh's serpents. A. See our SUPPLEMENT, No. 259, for the original formula, which gives off injurious vapors. To avoid this another formula gives potassium bichromate 2 parts, potassium nitrate 1 part, white sugar 3 parts. Pulverize each ingredient separately and mix without further pulverizing. Enclose in little paper cones. Do not inhale the dust in pulverizing the potassium bichromate.

(3676) H. H. G. asks for the cheapest as well as the least complicated way of making fuel gas on a small scale. Also the material used in the making of the gas. A. It is made by blowing air and steam mixed through incandescent coal. Either anthracite or bituminous coal may be used. Sometimes the air and steam are blown alternately, the products of the air blast being allowed to escape. This gives a gas of more intense heating power. You will find articles on the subject in our SUPPLEMENT, Nos. 276, 278, 531, 654, and many others.

(3677) E. B. N. asks: What solution that will be a cheap and good one can be used to clean dirt off from geological specimens and that will not injure the specimens? A. It depends on the nature of the specimens and of the dirt. Good soap and water with a scrubbing brush, or a wire brush such as foundry men use, are available.

(3678) E. D. asks for the composition of the substance on the trick matches inclosed; when struck a slight explosion takes place and the flame is extinguished. A. It is a compound of silver, probably fulminate, gummed to the match.

(3679) W. O. B. asks: How can I purify and make into the solid state a solution containing nitric and hydrochloric acids and pure gold leaf, in order to use the same as a tanning solution for photographic prints? A. Evaporate nearly to dryness, add more water and re-evaporate, and repeat until it is neutral in reaction. If you evaporate to full dryness, there is danger of producing a basic salt.

(3680) G. H. asks: 1. How is gasoline gas made for illuminating purposes? A. Gas can be made from gasoline by passing air over its surface. The air takes up enough of the vapor to burn. The temperature of the gasoline tends to fall on account of the absorption of heat by the evaporation; hence the apparatus should be kept at a constant temperature as far as possible. 2. Is the gas referred to very dangerous? A. No; it is used in a great many country houses with success. 3. Is the gas very easily blown out. If so, is there any protection for the light? A. It is more easily extinguished than pure coal gas. It is burned in Argand burners with chimneys or in special open and unprotected burners. 4. Has heat or cold any effect on the light? A. Heat would tend to improve it, and sufficient cold might by condensing the gasoline in the pipes extinguish it. Under ordinary conditions it gives no trouble. 5. What is the cost of gasoline light per thousand feet? A. No figure can be given, as the gas is not measured. It is a cheap form of illuminant.

(3681) S. A. A. asks how to make a gold plating solution (the best), how to couple and use it with my dynamo which I made like that described in SUPPLEMENT, No. 161, only with the drum armature. Field is wound with No. 16 and armature with No. 18 double covered magnet wire. It works well. I would like the solution and connections fully described, so I can make it myself. I am a practical watchmaker and a subscriber. A. For information on plating solutions we refer you to SUPPLEMENT, No. 310. A dynamo wound as you have it is not suitable for plating, as it gives a current of too high an E. M. F. Probably an armature wound with No. 10 or No. 12 wire would answer. Consult SUPPLEMENT, Nos. 720 and 793, for information on small plating dynamos.
