Che CENTURY

in its newly revised and completed 10 volume form can be bought at half price and paid for in little monthly installments that figure only 10 cents a day.

The Wanamaker Store has secured an entire edition of this greatest of all reference works, and by so doing, made possible the great price-reduction and the easy-payment system.

The work is so well known as to need little telling about, to most of you. It is fair to assume that the majority of reading and thinking people of our country who do not already possess a set of the volumes have wanted to, and were deterred probably by the cost, which has been considerable, of necessity, until now.

Readers of the Scientific American will find in its pages the fullest, clearest reatment of all the vast range of subjects embraced under Mechanics, Architecture, the Arts, the Trades, etc., etc., each bit of each of them classified under its own head, so that one doesn't have to search through a long article on engines to find "Twin Cylinder" or "Vacuum Pan." Instead, one turns directly to "Twin Cylinder" and finds a detail drawing with complete description of parts-like the dynamo illustrated up in the corner of this announcement—and a comprehensive article with cross references that carry the reader still more minutely into the parts and the workings of this particular piece of machinery, all without cumbering of unnecessary detail, all without loss of time, and absolutely without fear of misstatement or omission.

As a Dictionary, as a Cyclopedia, and as an Atlas the "Century" is universally admitted to be the greatest ever compiled-and the latest. What we want you to know, is that it contains a complete and accurate summary of trade-knowledge, etc., that has never before been gathered in any one work-indeed, much of it will not be found even in the special hand-books of the various arts and sciences.

It fully takes the place of every other reference work-that's the simplest way of putting it.

; B, armature; C, armature coils; D, magnet-coils E, pole piece; F, automatic regulator for shifting maintaining a constant current in the lamp circuit number of lamps in operation; G, commutator; H, brushes; J, main circuit switch; K, circuit switches; on multiple circuit.

This is a reproduction of one of the 8,000 illustrations in the "Century." It accompanies an authoritative, complete, and condensed series of articles on " Electricity,"

Write us for particulars of the offer (mention Scientific Amer-ICAN, please), and we'll mail you illustrated specimen pages, sample map, description of bindings, and all that, and also a special pamphlet showing what the "Century" contains for Architects, or for Electricians, Engineers, etc. Tell us, of course, which of these you're most interested in, as they are separate pamphlets.

NO MORE CREEPING RAILS

The Hercules Angle Bar, patented by Sullivan & Coleman of Fredericks burg, Iowa, is pronounced by railroad men as the greatest invention of the age. A continuous rail joint which positively prevents creeping rails, low joints and guards against spreading of gauge and does not interfere with expansion or contraction. While adapted to all tracks, its resisting power is best shown on double track, heavy grades, sharp curves and elevative roots where resistance is mostly required. For particulars write SULLIVAN & COLEMAN, FREDERICKSBURG, IOWA.

Burst Water Pipes a Ching of the Past

You can now make all water pipes as secure from bursting in winter as in summer. This pneumatic system is the only one which successfully prevents the anneyment and costly bursting of water pipes. It has solved a great eco-mic problem. Highly endorsed by Architects, Engineers and Municipal Officials. No new house should be completed without this system, and all house owners should avail themselves of this "ounce of prevention" in season.
